Microswimmers – From Single Particle Motion to Collective Behaviour

September 18 - 22, 2017

Gerhard GOMPPER
Research Center Jülich, Allemagne

Autonomous microswimmers are a fascinating class of soft matter systems that exhibit an intriguing mechanics and dynamics on the level of individual swimmers and novel emergent collective behavior. Their study combines the biophysics of self-propulsion via motor proteins, artificial propulsion mechanisms, swimming strategies at low Reynolds numbers, the hydrodynamic interaction of swimmers, and the collective motion of large numbers of agents. This Summer School is aimed at students at the PhD level, but also at Master's students and postdocs, from all fields related to microswimmers, in particular physics, biology, chemistry, material sciences, and engineering. The school will provide a broad overview of the field, with an emphasis on interdisciplinary aspects.
